Sydney, University Press, (1974).

This is the story of Samuel Terry (1776 - 1838) who was convicted of theft in Lancashire in 1800, transported to Botany Bay, and became the richest man in New South Wales. The author examines the accumulation of his vast wealth, as publican, merchant, brewer, miller, but above all in land in Sydney and the bush as pioneer in the Illawarra, Bathurst and Yass. Prahran; Military Melbourne; 1999.

This first printing consists of 3800 standard copies and a limited subscribers' dedication edition. The later were restricted to the Military Melbourne mailing list with a few available to non-subscribers, these were individually dedicated to particular servicemen, in this case Private Brendan Calcutt, of Williamstown, who served with the 14th Battalion and died at the age of 20 years from septicaemia on the 18th December 1915. This narrative is written by one of the original members of the Fourteenth Battalion Edgar Rule. It was first published in 1933 and used a string of aliases to protect men who were still living as well as their relatives. In this revised publication the real names and identities of the men involved are finally recorded. Click here to Order

Early New Zealand: A Dependency of New South Wales, 1788-1841.

First Edition; Demy 8vo; pp. xii, 192; illustrated with 6 b/w. plates, 2 maps, appendices, bibliography, index, bound in original blue cloth, title lettered in gilt on spine, dustjacket a little chipped on edges with some closed tears, good copy.

Carlton, Vic.; Melbourne University Press; 1958.

Early Australian governors were not certain that New Zealand came with their jurisdiction because Phillip's commission of 1787 had referred only to New South Wales and 'adjacent islands'. Limited by a stringent budget they considered the new settlement in New Zealand was as much an embarrassment as an asset. This uncertain status continued until fear of foreign intervention, as well as the need for protecting both natives and law-abiding European settlers against unscrupulous traders, compelled the British government to take action. First Edition, First Printing; Med. 8vo; pp. xiv, 294, (1); table of Japanese, American, and British Navel and Air Forces in the Far East in 1938, notes, bibliography, index, bound in original red cloth, title lettered in gilt on spine, dustjacket, very good copy.

Honolulu; University of Hawai'i Press; 1998.

The debate over Emperor Hirohito's accountability for government decisions and military operations up to the end of the World War II began before the end of the war and has continued even after his death in 1989. The book documents this controversy while providing insights into the Showa emperor's role in military planning in Imperial Japan. It argues the Hirohito both knew of and participated in such planning and offers evidence that he was informed well in advance of imperial army and navy decisions, including the surprise attack on Pearl Harbor.
